

Kristine Miyeko Minami has been involved in the Japanese American community for as long as she can remember. As a child, she participated in local events organized by the Japanese American Citizens League (JACL) and, in college, wrote her senior thesis on the effects of the internment on the Japanese American family structure. After college, Kristine continued to explore her interest in her identity and family history by moving to Japan to work as an Assistant Language Teacher in the Japan Exchange Teaching (JET) Program(me). After returning from Japan, Kristine worked for the Asia Foundation, the Japan Society and the JACL as its Director for Public Affairs. During her tenure at the JACL, Kristine directed the Washington, DC office and was responsible for advocacy and outreach efforts, coalition-building and leadership training. Kristine has also served on the JACL national board as governor for the Eastern District Council and as a supervisor for the JACL's Kakehashi program. Currently, Kristine is a civil rights attorney working for the federal government.

Kristine received her JD with honors from the Georgetown University Law Center; earned an MA from the Elliott School of International Affairs, George Washington University; and received her undergraduate degree from Rutgers College, Rutgers University. She is a native of Washington, DC and lives in Maryland with her husband and son.
