

Carolyn Hoover is an investment banker, content creator, and competitive athlete. She formerly worked for Rothschild & Co. on the Consumer M&A team in the NYC office and is currently Miss Delaware Earth USA. As a Team USA triathlete, she has earned two silver medals for the country at Multisport World Championships. She has also worked for the Department of Commerce, both locally in Washington, D.C. and abroad at the U.S. Embassy in Paris, France.

As the granddaughter of two Japanese American incarcerated (Ray and Mary Murakami), Carolyn has been committed to the NJAMF mission since childhood. In high school, she earned her Girl Scout Gold Award through creating a digital tour of the Memorial and was selected by the Foundation as part of the first cohort of students to go to Heart Mountain Wyoming to film a Digital Storytelling Project. She was also selected by Japan's Ministry of Foreign Affairs to visit Japan as a student ambassador to further the relationship between Japan and the U.S. and served as the Treasurer for the American Executive Committee of the Japan America Student Conference (JASC).

Hoover earned her B.A. in Public Policy & Global Health from Duke University and spent a year studying Strategic Design at Parsons School of Design's Paris campus.